Prasperg, Balthasar, 16th cent. Clarissima plane atq; chora ‖ lis musice interptatio ... ;1501; (Card 2)
Below the title is a large woodcut representing (at left) a music master and (at right) a young woman playing the harp; in the upper section of the cut is a scroll with the hexachord, ut re mi fa sol la. (The editions of 1504 and 1507 have the same title-page illustration) At end, a folded leaf or table with "Scala greca" and "Scala latina". Gothic type.
First edition? Gesner's Bibliotheca, 1574, p. 88, contains the following statement: "Balthasar. Praspergius Mersporgensis scripsit de Musica choralli librum, regulis multis ac exemplis variis refertum, & eruditum in quarto. Basileæ anno Domini 1500". Maittaire (citing Gesner), Panzer (citing Maittaire), and Haïn (13227) list under Prasperg a "De musica choralli", Basileæ 1500. The notice in Gesner is probably an inexact description of the present edition.

Preparatoirlyk plan ... ‹1780› (Card 2)

This project for a future treaty of commerce had been secretly concerted at Aix-la-Chapelle in 1778 between Jean de Neufville, a merchant, professing to act under the instructions of Van Berckel, pensionary of Amsterdam, and William Lee, an American commissioner to Berlin. In October 1780, when Henry Laurens was captured by the British while on his way from America to Holland, a draft of it was found among his papers, and although it was neither authorized nor sanctioned by the States-General nor by Congress, it served as a pretext for England's declaration of war against the Netherlands. cf. Fiske's American revolution, v. 2, p. 155-157, and Winsor's Narrative and critical history of America, v. 7, p. 64-68.

Presbyterian Church in the U. S. and U. S. A.

Organized in 1789.

In 1837 a split occurred dividing the church into "old school" and "New school" branches. Each branch called itself the Presbyterian church in the U. S. A. In order to differentiate materials issued during the split the designations Old school and New school are added in curves after the name of the body.

In 1858 the Southern synods and presbyteries of the New school withdrew over the slavery issue and organized the United Synod of the Presbyterian church.

In 1861 the Southern synods and presbyteries of the Old school withdrew and formed the Presbyterian church in the Confederate State of America. In 1864 the United Synod of the Presbyterian church was merged into it. In 1865 upon cessatio of the war the name was changed into Presbyterian church in the United States.

In 1869 the Old school and New school branches in the North reunited.
